David Wainer has a general corporate practice, with a particular emphasis on intellectual property, privacy and emissions trading. David has experience working on transactions in the field of information technology procurement and licensing of intellectual property. David assists clients with information technology contracts and intellectual property matters relating to commercial transactions. David also assists clients with regulatory compliance in technology related matters, such as privacy, consumer protection, cybersecurity and anti-spam.

In addition to his intellectual property practice, David assists project proponents with the marketing and sale of emissions offsets, emissions performance credits, compliance credits and other emissions trading credits and instruments.

Prior to law school, David worked as an operations manager at a national renewable energy industry association, assisting with policy advocacy and input with related legislation.

David summered and articulated with the firm. In his spare time, David enjoys spending time with his family and is an avid Calgary Flames fan.
